You, the teacher will decide how to use the above instrument. It will not be possible to assess each learner's knowledge, skills and values in each lesson. You might decide, for instance, to focus in a particular lesson on skills, in another lesson on the knowledge, and on the values in yet another. Another useful strategy is to divide your class into assessment groups of say ten learners as a time. Each time you do an assessment of the above kind you choose a single group on a rotation basis.
